

Fragment of a manuscript page with Latin text in Gothic script. The text is written on aged, yellowed parchment with red horizontal ruling lines. The visible text includes the words "et sic" and "videtur".

et sic videtur et

A fragment of an ancient manuscript, likely a scroll, showing several lines of text written in a dark ink on a yellowish, aged parchment. The text is arranged in approximately seven horizontal lines, separated by faint red lines. The script is a cursive or semi-cursive style, characteristic of medieval or early modern manuscripts. The parchment is heavily worn, with significant damage, including tears, holes, and discoloration, particularly along the bottom edge. The text is difficult to decipher due to the damage and the cursive nature of the script.

Fragment of a manuscript page with red horizontal lines and Gothic script. The text is partially obscured by damage and includes the words "Florentini" and "S. Martini".

Florentini S. Martini

1111

